Increase your personal effectiveness – through inner clarity and a convincing appearance!

Anyone who wants to lead – whether they be a woman or a man – is met with a wide range of challenges: Applying one's personal competence purposefully, moving confidently on the enterprise policy carpet, making one's performance attributable, taking the lead confidently in a team, to name a few. Yet even today, it seems to make a big difference whether it is men or women who take the lead. And that is a good thing. Stereotypes aside, women exhibit different competences than men in leading and management. Finding your own style and staying authentic while doing so, is essential, in order that employees will want to follow.

Combining tact, well-chosen words, a confident body-language and voice, you can succeed in achieving your own interests and goals within the framework of effective leadership.

In this seminar we offer sharp analyses, gripping discussions and applicable contents for your everyday work situation. We always make room for practice and for you to bring up your own topics. You will be supported not only by two female instructors, but also by a male instructor. Thus, you are offered feedback from different perspectives and can collect valuable pointers on your way to more sovereignty, clarity and assertiveness.

Topics:

- Finding my role and my own style as a (female) leader
- Pyramids vs. networks – men's & women's career understanding
- Being authentic and confident when dealing with power and status
- Rules of the Game: body language and its effect
- Mastering difficult situations

Target Group:

Women in leadership, or those that want to become such.

Dates:

May 9th through 10th 2019 (Thursday/Friday)

The training begins at 11:00 a.m. on the first day (enabling travel the day-of, instead of an evening earlier) and ends on the second day around 5:00 p.m.
